Why Do You Want A Website? Have you heard from your teenager that he or she wants to build a website? If you’re like us, you’re not quite sure what to make of this request. Website builders are a dime a dozen and although your teenager may not understand the difference between a Google and a Yahoo, they are bound to find a quick and easy way to build a website just like hundreds of other kids and young adults across the nation. So, What Do You Need? To develop a good website, you need to ask yourself a few questions before diving into your next website creation project. You need to understand that building a website takes a lot of time and money and that you need to figure out how much of those you can spend. It’s also a good idea to think about how you are going to promote your website once it is finished. You need to focus on making your website stand out from the other websites and marketing plans that are currently in existence. Once you are satisfied with all of these important factors, you’re ready to start building your website. Your teenager probably has a website and may even have one of his or her own, but building a website that will stand out from the other websites is hard to do. You need to have a clear idea of what you want your website to stand for. As an example, look at Facebook. If you and your child are on Facebook, it stands for “Friendship”. If your child wants to build a website that is focused on sports, he or she would probably want a website that promotes sports. You need to focus on what you want your site to represent before you go to work on the website. How Much Do You Plan to Spend? If you are planning to invest in a website that will be a part of your business, you need to have a good idea of how much money you will be spending on your website. If you plan to start a website that will take a lot of time and energy to develop, you should be prepared to spend a good amount of money. You will find that your next website will need to have a professional design. You will also need some sort of easy-to-use website builder that will allow you to create pages with ease. You want your website to stand out and be representative of your business. Finally, you need to think about how many people will be visiting your website. If
